SCOUTING CREWS WILL SEARCH FOR BEETLES

Entire State Outside of Quarantined Area to be Watched

DIVIDED INTO DISTRICTS

HARRISBURG, July 21—(INS)—Practically the entire state outside of the Japanese beetle quarantine area will be watched for new manifestations, the Department of Agriculture announced today. The check is necessary, it was said, because of the danger that a few beetles which slipped through the quarantine lines have established colonies in other sections.

The scouting crews will have headquarters at Altoona, Pittsburgh, Montoursville, Bushkill, Liverpool, Scranton and Chambersburg. Other crews to check the extent of the beetle infestation in nurseries and greenhouses within the quarantined area will have headquarters at Lancaster, Bloomsburg, Oxford, Norristown and Allentown.

The state has been divided into five districts, each of which has a supervisor. The supervisors are located at Norristown, Lancaster, Harrisburg, Milton and Scranton. The district scouts report to their supervisors who in turn report to the state headquarters at Norristown.

Department officials suggest that persons finding beetles will aid in the work if they will take them to the nearest scouting crew.

WORKMEN COMPENSATION REFEREE HEARS 2 CASES

Gladys Helms, Riegelsville, Has Petition for Injuries Sustained

NOBLE CASE UP AGAIN

DOYLESTOWN, July 21—Two hearings were conducted here in Court room No. 2 at the county court house by Hiram H. Keller, Workmen's Compensation Referee for the Philadelphia district.

In the case of Gladys Helms, of Riegelsville, against the F. and W. Grand Store, of Easton, the hearing on the claim petition for injuries sustained while the woman was working in an Easton store, was dismissed by Referee Keller for the non-appearance of the claimant.

The second and final hearing was held in the case of Mrs. Sadie Noble, of Quakertown, against the township of Springfield, Bucks county. Mrs. Noble is asking compensation for the death of her husband, I. Edward Noble, who was killed on November 19, 1927, at a grade crossing at Rockhill, while hauling stone from the General Crushed Stone Company's quarry to Zion Hill for the supervisors of Millford township. She claims compensation as a surviving widow without children.

Witnesses were heard to establish the earning power of I. Edward Noble. Under a new law, death compensation in the case of a widow with no children is $19 a week for 300 weeks.

The contention in the case was whether Noble was an employee of the township or an independent contractor hauling the stone. The claimant was represented by C. William Freed and the defendant by E. C. White, Phila., attorney for an insurance company.

Colonel Henry D. Paxson to Have Marker Placed Near Meeting House

Appropriate markers are to be provided for the resting place of those Revolutionary War heroes who died at the Buckingham Friends Meeting House during that conflict of years gone by.

A decision has been reached by trustees of the meeting and Colonel Harry D. Paxson to have the graves preserved and properly marked.

It was thought some time ago that in time the graves would probably be disturbed, and these fears were again voiced when a new highway between Buckingham and Lahaska was built. Soil was sought for filling in, and the high bank of the meeting house was looked upon favorably for that purpose.

Graves of the unknown Revolutionary soldiers are on the north side of the York Road, near the old stone horse stable and about 70 feet from the meeting house door.

In 1856 when the Buckingham and Doylestown Turnpike Co. regraded the hill, the workmen exposed the bones of a number of the soldiers. At that time the bones were collected, however, and interred in a safer place back from the roadside.

It was from near this spot that recently the highway contractor, without knowledge of the Penna. Highway Department, sought to purchase a supply of earth from the high embankment from the Meeting, but the building committee refused to consider the suggestion after a conference with Colonel Paxson, who owns property on the opposite side of the road and who was very well posted concerning the location of the unknown soldiers' graves which he has had looked after for a number of years. Given these facts, the committee refused to consider any proposal for removing "fill" from the property of the meeting.

In this effort to protect the site of the soldiers' graves the Highway Department gave its hearty co-operation. Colonel Paxson plans to erect on the opposite side of the road, on his own property—as the Society of Friends disapproves any monumental markers on meeting house grounds — a stone monument with a bronze tablet on it suitably inscribed with a brief summary of the facts concerning the soldiers buried nearby.

Several patriotic organizations are anxious, it is said, to participate in the preservation of the graves and the dedication of the monument which will probably take place in the Fall.

Probably thirty Revolutionary soldiers were buried there, it is said, in the Winter of 1777, while the meeting house was maintained as a hospital for sick and wounded soldiers as the result of an order by General George Washington. Colonel Paxson has a photostatic copy of the order, directing that all sick and wounded soldiers be taken there, and of a later order, when it was filled, directing that others be taken to the Moravian Hospital, Bethlehem.

INDEPENDENTS WALLOPED BY HIBERNIANS HERE

"Lefty" Rodgers Was In Good Form and Annexed A Victory

FINAL SCORE 5 TO 0

By T. M. Juno

"Lefty" Rodgers was in good form here last night when the A. O. H. team white-washed the fast going Independents, 5 to 0.

"Lefty" allowed but two hits, one a stratch hit. Both hits were widely scattered and the plate was never in danger of being dented by the Independents.

Romeo, the Independents mound ace, started on the peak for his team but was battered too hard, so he left the box in favor of Tranotti. Tranotti was hit very hard but he was aided by some brilliant catches in left field by Piazza.

In the first Piazza caught Lake's fly and doubled Rodgers off second. In the following inning he ran from deep left to behind third to catch Dougherty's short fly and while off balance threw the ball to Avella, catching Thompson off second. Piazza made another nice running catch of McGinley's left in the fifth, his throw to Romeo doubled McDevitt.

Dougherty made a wonderful stop of Piazza's grounder in the fourth. His toss to Lake was a little wide, but the first sackers made a wide stretch at the ball and caught it just a step ahead of the fleet-footed runner.

Avella commenced the game by fanning. McGinley was hit by a pitched ball. Lasprella hit to Lake who stepped on first and then threw to Dougherty for a double-play.

The Hibernians scored three runs in their initial bat. Thompson singled. Dougherty was safe on Tranotti's error. Margerum reached first on an error by Kohler, counting Thompson. E. McDevitt batted one to left for a single scoring Margerum. Dougherty went out at third, Kohler to Dugan. Rodgers reached first when he was hit by a pitched ball. Romeo made a wild pitch, counting McDevitt and Rodgers going to second. This was enough for Romeo and Tranotti went in. McGinley walked. Lake fled to Piazza whose throw to Dugan doubled Rodgers.

Rodgers made fast work of the three batters in the second. Dugan hit to Dougherty and was out. Kohler fled to Brady. Piazza grounded to Rodgers. For the "Hiboes," Brady struck out. McCafferty singled, and went to second on a passed ball. Thompson singled, counting McCafferty. Dougherty's short fly went to Piazza and Thompson was doubled off second.

The Independents threw a scare in their third. Antonelli grounded out. Tranotti reached first on Lake's error. Romeo fanned. Avella received a base hit on a blow to right. McGinley skied to McCafferty.

The Hibernians again tallied in their turn. Margerum singled and advanced to second on McDevitt's sacrifice. Rodgers reached first on Avella's error, scoring Margerum. McGinley fled to short. Lake grounded out.

Thompson threw out Lasprella and Dugan to begin the third. Kohler singled. Dougherty made a nice stop of Piazza's hopper and threw him out. A. O. H. failed to score in their half. Brady singled. McCafferty whiffed. Thompson, lined to McGinley. Dougherty singled. Margerum fled out.

The Independents failed to do anything in their final bat. Rubino batted for Antonelli and struck out. Tranotti batted for Antonelli and struck out. Tranotti batted for Antonelli and struck out. (Continued on Page Four)

SIGN CARRIER PLANE BUILT HERE NAMED "SIGN CARRIER I"

Formal Christening at Roosevelt Field Took Place on Tuesday

2 FROM HERE ATTEND

Plane Christened by Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt Before Large Gathering

Formal christening of the "Sign Carrier, I," completed at the Keystone Aircraft Corporation one month ago, took place at Roosevelt Field, Long Island, this week.

At the impressive ceremonies Tuesday, there were gathered representatives of the aeronautical industry from sections in and about New York, and those interested in the aerial advertising enterprise. Representatives from the Keystone Corporation were Stanley W. Jacques, chief test pilot, and Elliot Cogswell, who flew to Roosevelt Field to attend the ceremony.

Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt christened the plane as she stood upon a platform built for the purpose, the balcony having been trimmed with bunting in the nation's colors.

The craft, built for the Aerial Advertising Company of New York, was put through performance tests here, prior to delivery at New York. It is a modification of the new Panther army bomber, having a power plant consisting of three air-cooled engines, one of which is a Pratt and Whitney Wasp, and the other two Wright Whirlwinds.

The normal wing-spread of this craft was 75 feet, but in order to enable the advertising company to use a larger sign the lower wing was extended to 90 feet.

The "Sign Carrier, I" is equipped in such a manner that the propeller driven generator emits electricity during flight. Electricity is generated through a system of high tension wiring, and transformers in the wings are placed at high voltage being used in lighting the numerous letters which are spelled out across the lower wings.

The Neon patented lights are used for this purpose. This is a most novel and interesting process. Gas passing through glass tubes in the wing acts as a transmittable for the electricity, lighting up the entire tube. The tubes are shaped in the forms of the various letters of the alphabet.

The Neon lighting system has the peculiar property of appearing larger as greater space is put between the plane and the reader.

The Aerial Advertising Company is taking contracts from numerous advertising companies for the advertising of products at night in New York City. Later it is expected that this method of advertising will be extended to practically every large city in the United States. The president of the above mentioned company is Mr. Peterson, with whom is associated Roland Rhoiffs, world famous altitude pilot and holder of many world's records. Mr. Rhoiffs will pilot the plane.

Two distinguished individuals have visited the Keystone plant, here, during the past week. On Thursday afternoon Lieutenant Glenn Lampton, exhibited his prowess in the air by doing some stunt flying. Mr. Lampton flew here from the Edgewood Arsenal in order to participate in a fishing trip with C. Talbot Porter, vice-president of the Keystone Corporation. It was in order to work off some of the enthusiasm gained in his successful fishing expedition that Mr. Lampton took to the air and the stunt-flying in the afternoon.

Gardner Carr, who is connected with the Boeing Airplane Company, of Seattle, Washington, was a house guest of the president of the Keystone company, Edgar N. Gott, and Mrs. Gott, during the past few days. Mr. Carr likewise enjoyed a visit to Bristol's airplane factory.

WHY NOT TRY THIS?

In some ancient language the word for stranger became the word meaning an enemy. The man who lived in the next valley, or beyond the forest or on the other side of the river might be a bad fellow, a potential foe.

Science has helped men to get acquainted. Fast steamships, railways, motor cars, airplanes, telegraph, telephone and wireless are bringing men together and teaching one people the good qualities of another.

Science is teaching men that they have enemies enough without fighting each other. The whole human race is beset constantly by myriads of foes.

Even in the old fighting days men who weren't friends, finding themselves attacked by a common adversary, joined cause. Maybe in this way science can bring nations together and stop meaningless quarrels.

How much better for Germans and Frenchmen and Italians and Englishmen and Americans to devote their fighting energies to exterminating the germs that cause tuberculosis and cancer and infantile paralysis.

Most of these foes are strangers. We know little about them and we guess that there may be many others of their kind, equally deadly, that we know nothing of at all save by their destructive work.

Dr. Bernard M. Duggar, director of the national research department of the United States department of agriculture, recently reported that he had discovered evidence of a world of organisms so infinitesimal that they cannot be seen even by the best microscope ever made.

In such fields of research lie the secrets of life and the secrets of disease, decay and death. It is time intelligent men learned not to plan death and destruction. How much more worthy to plan defense of life and the means to make life more worth while.

HOOVER GOES WEST

On his trip to his California home where nomenclature ceremonies will be held next month, Herbert Hoover is being given the enthusiastic acclaim of the West. Superior, Wisconsin, in the heart of the former LaPollette stronghold, declared a holiday to welcome the next president. At stations at which his train stopped, great throngs vociferously greeted the Republican candidate.

Herbert Hoover's popularity is growing at a rate that forecasts another Republican tidal wave in November. What little discord there was within the Republican party has vanished, in contrast to the growing disaffection in the Democratic party. Al Smith is doomed to the role of an also-ran.

Mr. Hoover's quiet dignity and reserve and lack of political bombast has already won for him the confidence of the nation. The election will be merely in the nature of a ratification.

SYNOPSIS

A satchel containing $200,000 has been stolen from the Mercer National Bank. Rose Shannon, escaping from the unwelcome attentions of Chuck White, finds the satchel in the street. A policeman arrests her on her way to return it. He takes her to the station, where she is held as an accomplice when it is found that the satchel is empty. She is released a week later, but detectives trail her. Chuck takes her to the Professor, leader of the gang involved in the robbery. On the pretext of befriending her, the Professor promises Rose that Chuck will take her to his aunt in the country.

"Well, come on, honey," Chuck turned about and led her towards the door that opened into the hallway. "I want you to take a look at all the swell glad rags we got for you, and you better climb into some of 'em. I'll take you upstairs."

"I hope you'll like everything we bought for you," the Professor patted the girl's shoulder.

"Oh, thank you," Rose hurried away with Chuck, her heart beating high with excitement and happiness. "You know, Chuck," she sighed as they went up the steps, "it all sounds just like a dream, I can hardly believe it's me—it don't seem possible. I'd just love to dance up and down, I'm so happy."

"That's great!" Chuck enthused. "We're gonna have a swell time down to the old farm. I ain't been down there much since I was a kid. Here, you can use this room." Chuck threw open a door at the head of the stairs and led Rose in. "Here's all the stuff. I guess it'll fit you, all right."

Rose looked about the old room, furnished much on the order of the shop downstairs. A great, old mahogany four-poster bed occupied a large part of the space. Across the room stood a huge dresser of a later period, with a long mirror hung between the rows of small drawers. On the bed reposed several boxes, a hat box, and a new, black traveling satchel.

"That's a new bag I got for you, honey," Chuck indicated the satchel on the bed. "I didn't know if you had one. I guess you can find everything all right. An' all the boxes is yours. Just park your old stuff here—you can get it when you come back. We ain't got much time."

"Oh, Chuck, you've been so good to me." The hot tears welled up in the girl's eyes, and splashed down her cheeks.

"Here, now, didn't I tell you you oughtn't to cry?"

"But I'm not crying," she smiled through her tears. "I'm just happy."

"Atta boy!" Chuck caught the girl in his arms and kissed her. "I'll wait downstairs. An' hurry up."

"All right, Chuck." She closed the door behind him and turned to the boxes on the bed.

She threw off her hat and coat with a sigh of relief. New clothes—all her own! She opened the first, and with a little cry of joy drew forth an ensemble suit of dark brown, trimmed with fluffy brown fur. She opened the other two boxes quickly to find a jersey suit of light blue with a bright colored scarf to tie about the neck. She discovered two pairs of shoes, one of brown kid, the other black patent leather with several pairs of stockings for each. She kicked off her dusty, frayed satin pumps and slipped her feet into the brown shoes. They fitted perfectly.

The round hat box contained a brown felt hat that just matched the suit, and a light straw cloche that Rose was quite certain was just the grandest thing she had ever seen in her life. She danced up before the mirror, and began removing her old garments and prepared to step into the new.

At last, after adjusting the new hat at various and odd angles she finally settled it to suit her fancy, and then began to pack her few belongings in the new traveling bag.

CHAPTER X

Downstairs in the shop the Professor was peering out the window, hidden by the tapestry. Across the street he could see two men saunter by and round the corner, Simpson and Cowles—he knew them. Well, he had figured right so far. If none of his plans went awry the money should soon be safe and within his keeping.

"The dicks still waiting?" Chuck came into the room, lighting a cigarette.

"Sure—the saps!" the Professor turned about. "Well, how did you make out? Everything all right?"

"All right? I'll tell the cock-eyed world it is," Chuck laughed. "Didn't you get that right off the bat? Jeez, she fell for the line I handed her, an' she didn't ask no questions. She just eats it up."

"Look here, you've got everything straight now, haven't you? If you don't put this thing through in pretty short order I'll break every bone in your body!" Heminway suddenly became a tower of rage, shaking his fists in the younger man's face.

"Aw, pipe down," Chuck counseled coolly, blowing a ring of smoke towards the ceiling. "I'm gonna put this through all right. An' I'm gonna get even with this Jane if it's the last thing I do. Say, you don't suppose I'm gonna lay down on this job after the way she beaned me. Well, I should spit!"

"Well, I'll give you one month—no more. Remember that." Heminway shot out his orders menacingly. "You've got one month to find out from that Jane where the money is, and God help you if you double-cross me!"

"Say, what d'ya think I am—a flat foot? I'll find out—it won't take me a week," he promised jauntily.

"Look here, don't be so sure of yourself," the Professor advised. "That baby's either damned clever, or she's just so plain dumb the other mob's using her. And personally, I think she's clever. No one could be as dumb as she is and live. I've seen her kind work before. Playing the sweet and simple country girl! That was a swell cock and bull story she had cooked up about the farm back in Iowa. I'll bet she doesn't know a hen from an egg except when she sees it in a restaurant all cooked."

"You know sometimes you even show intelligence, Professor," Chuck grinned.

"Well, just remember what I told you. Maurey was here—he thinks we've got the right dope. Did you see Bobbie upstairs?"

"Yep! I told her I'd let her know when everything's ready," Chuck nodded. "Them poor boneheads still hanging around?" He crossed over to the window and peered out.

"Yep, there they are," he laughed. "They're gonna be sore as hell when they find out what's going on."

"Shut up!" the Professor snapped. "She's coming! Mug, get over at that window and keep an eye on those dicks. Quick! Sparrow, do your stuff!" Heminway pulled his glasses down onto his nose as Rose opened the door and stepped into the room, her traveling case in her hand.

"Well?" She dropped the satchel and pirouetted about displaying the dress.

"You look perfectly charming, my dear." The Professor took her hand and led her out into the shop. "Doesn't she, Chuck?" His kindly face smiled beneficently.

"I'll say she does," Chuck looked approvingly at the girl. "Did you like the glad rags, honey?"

"Oh, Chuck, they're perfectly beautiful," Rose returned delightedly. "I've never had so many pretty things at once in all my life. And everything fits, too."

"Sure, I remember everything about you, see," Chuck returned. "Well, I guess I better get my keister an' we can get going. I'll be right back." He started towards the door, signalling the Professor with a nod of his head.

"Don't worry, I'll take good care of this young lady," Heminway beamed. "You come over here, my dear. I've something I want to show you." He led Rose by the arm to the little office in the rear of the shop.

Chuck bounded up the stairs, two at a time, and threw open the door of the room where he had left Bobbie.

"Come on, kid, quick! She's downstairs. Leave your stuff here. You can come back for it." He hurried the girl into the room just vacated by Rose. "Hell! I hope she's left the scenery. Yep, there they are." He indicated the discarded clothing on the bed. "Hop into 'em."
